FOURTH SUNDAY OF EASTER

Acts 2:14, 36-41

GOOD NEWS, BAD NEWS

"What do we do now?" That question arises whenever bad news comes our way. We follow our routine life but then hit a bump in the road. Something we were not expecting has appeared on the path. The road upon which we felt so secure does not feel the same any more. "What do we do now?"

That is how people reacted on the first Pentecost after they had heard the end of Peter's sermon. Peter had just explained to them the core message about Jesus' life, death, and resurrection. The people swallowed hard because this good news felt like bad news.

Peacefully, they had been following their routines, paying little attention to the message of this prophet Jesus who had lived among them. But now, witnesses said he had risen from the dead. Now they realize the fullness of his message. "What do we do now?" they wondered.

Peter's solution is direct: "Repent and be baptized."

Sometimes the good news of Easter feels like bad news. We regret we did not do enough for Lent. We confess the limitations of our commitment to Jesus. We realize we need the help that comes from his word alone. What do we do now?

Did You Know?

The Lectionary for Mass is the book from which the readings are proclaimed.

The earliest Christians simply read whatever scriptures were available in their community. The first "lectionaries," appearing by the fifth or sixth century, were actually just Bibles with notes in the margins telling the reader which passage to read on a particular Sunday. By the seventh century Mass readings began to appear in books of their own. After the 16th-century Council of Trent, all the readings and prayers for Mass had been collected in a single book called the Roman Missal. Vatican II restored the older practice of publishing the readings separately.

The current Roman Catholic lectionary was created in 1970 by a commission set up after Vatican II to implement the council's liturgical reforms and has since been slightly revised twice. The RCL was created by a panel of experts in 1983 and then reviewed, adapted, and ultimately approved by various Protestant church authorities.

Both lectionaries are organized on a three-year cycle: Year A is the year of Matthew, Year B is Mark, and Year C is Luke. The Gospel of John is used each year at Christmas, Lent, and Easter, as well as to round out Year B, since Mark is short.

Next, the first reading is chosen, usually from one of the books of the Old Testament, or from the Acts of the Apostles in Eastertime. Often there is a thematic relationship between the gospel and the first reading. If the gospel is about Jesus giving sight to the blind, the first reading will tell how the blind will see when the Messiah comes.

The second reading is chosen from a New Testament letter or, in Eastertime, the Book of Revelation. During Advent, Christmas, Lent, and Easter, this reading is chosen for its particular content. Otherwise a letter is begun on one Sunday, and its major portions are read in order over successive Sundays.
